Resource 1

BuzzSprout

BuzzSprout is one of the world's best podcast distribution services. You can set up a free account within a few minutes and you can upload over 2 hours of content per month (for free).

I have moved all my podcasts from Anchor.fm to BuzzSprout because they have better analytics and some cool audio processing features. They also have a wide range of distribution channels.

When you upload a podcast on BuzzSprout, they will push them to Apple Podcasts, Spotify, Google Podcasts, Stitcher, Amazon Music, Pandora, iHeart Radio, Overcast, Castbox, and many more.

Lewitt LCT 440 Pure

If you are looking for the ultimate podcast microphone, this is it! Being a sound engineer myself, I have used a lot of pro audio condenser microphones from Rode to Sennheiser and more.

What I like about Lewitt LCT 440 Pure is that it's a large-diaphragm condenser microphone that has a crystal clear and crisp sound quality. When you listen to my podcasts, you'll be able to notice the quality of the sound.

Though there are many other cheaper alternatives, I prefer paying for quality. Clear sound is important. This mic comes in a nice box kit with pop filters, mic holders and a cute microphone carry case.

A dark blue Audient EVO 4 USB soundcard is shown at an angle. It features a green microphone icon on the front, a 48V phantom power switch, and various input and output ports. The text "EVO 4" is visible on the top and side of the device.

Audient EVO 4

If you are looking for the coolest looking and best sounding USB soundcard for recording your podcasts, the Audient EVO 4 is the one!

I have been using the Audient EVO 4 2x2 Ultra Low Latency USB Audio Interface for many months now. This has 2 inputs and 2 outputs and has very simple controls.

The sound quality is great. Sits perfectly on my table. I'm also able to control the sound inputs and outputs with ease. Once this is set up in your home studio, you'll never feel like removing it. :)

GarageBand

Being a sound engineer myself, I've been an avid Apple user for more than a decade. On my MacBook Pro, I record, edit, and export all my podcasts using Garageband.

Once you have connected your Lewitt LCT 440 Pure into your Audient EVO 4 soundcard, you can start seamlessly recording your podcasts into Garageband on an audio track.

In case you are a windows user, you can record on Adobe Audition or Audacity software. They pretty much have the same features, but I love the Mac. Ensure you use the right sound editing plugins to optimize and enhance the sound quality of your podcasts.

Podcast Mic Stand

There are a bunch of podcast mic stands out there in the market.

But what I prefer are the ones which can easily clip on to my work desk. I need the flexibility to move my microphone around and also adjust its height as per my requirement.

After trying various models, there is one particular model called Bulfyss which you should check out. It's very robust.

Once you have set up this on your table, you will not feel like removing it. I have been using this mic stand for more than 6 months without any issues. I also record videos using this stand.
